AMP! is an arts-based approach to sexual health education and HIV prevention. The model was initiated in Los Angeles and we have been developing the model for NC schools in collaboration with university, community and school-based partners. Please join us as we screen draft versions of short films written and performed by students at UNC-Chapel Hill, Duke University, and North Carolina Central University.

With your important feedback, the films will be used as part of AMP! to supplement existing curriculum. Schools will be offered the films and accompanying lesson plans free of charge as teaching tools for experiential arts-based learning as part of a collaboration between the UCLA Art & Global Health Center and NC-based partners.
